

City University to offer program at LWTC

City University of Seattle and Lake Washington Technical College (LWTC) have joined to bring CityU of Seattle's newly developed Bachelor of Arts in Management (B.A.M.) program to the LWTC campus in Redmond beginning this fall.

Through the partnership, former and current LWTC students will be able to transfer up to 90 LWTC credits into the B.A.M. program. Additionally, the program also is available to anyone in the community who has lower-level credits that they would like to apply to a four-year undergraduate degree.

"Literally tens of thousands of graduates and students of local technical colleges are successfully pursuing technical careers, and have gone on to operate their own businesses or have a desire to reach this goal," comments Lee Gorsuch, president, City University of Seattle. "By offering the B.A.M. program on the LWTC campus in Redmond students will be able to acquire the skills and understanding of business management needed to get to the next step in their careers."

The B.A.M. program provided by CityU at LWTC allows students to continue their studies on the campus where they began their coursework without having to change locations. LWTC also has agreements with a variety of other universities, providing its students with the ability to smoothly transition between a two-year technical degree and a bachelor's degree.

"This partnership with City University of Seattle is a great utilization of our Redmond campus, and a wonderful opportunity for an additional pathway to a bachelor degree for our students," said Dr. Sharon McGavick, LWTC president.

LWTC's main campus is located in Kirkland with a branch campus located in Redmond.
